Call for Abstracts

June 16-19, 2004

Sponsored by the Department of Community and Family Health
College of Public Health, University of South Florida, Tampa, FL and taking place at the
Sheraton Sand Key Resort on Clearwater Beach, Florida

The 14th Annual National Conference on Social Marketing in Public Health invites abstract submissions to be considered for oral presentations. The content should demonstrate the application of social marketing strategies to health behavior change and improvement of public health practice. Abstracts may describe contributions to theory, completed work involving social marketing, or work in progress that will be substantially completed by June 2004.

Of particular interest are applications of social marketing strategies that address the health objectives for the nation, promote social marketing within one’s own agency, demonstrate the sustainability and/or self-sufficiency of social marketing programs, or demonstrate cultural competency.

Other suggested topics include, but are not limited to: the use of social marketing to ameliorate health problems and issues of special populations; evaluation of social marketing programs and strategies; social marketing approaches to defining health problems; examining solutions to health problems; and changing health practices in school and community settings; and training and education in social marketing.
New this year — Submit abstracts on line.
Abstracts must be submitted on line and in English. The deadline for abstract submission is September 19, 2003
